Chief Health Officer Makes Ringing Defense of This Precaution Against Smallpox.

Dr. Levy's Advice

Successful vaccination is an abso-ute protection against smallpox. Every baby should be vaccinated before it is a year old, unless there is some good reason for not doing

So. Every one should be vaccinated again at the age of ten or twelve years. This ordinarily affords protection for life.

Scrupulous cleanliness should be observed in vaccinating and also thereafter until the arm is entirely well.

well.

No shield should be used—it does more harm than good.

If these points are observed, vaccination is free from danger, and usually even from serious inconvenience. A sore arm for a few days is the worst to be expected, and this is a small price to pay for protection from a dangerous, loathsome disease like smallpox.

statement to The Times-Dispatch last night, Dr. E. C. Levy, Chief Health Officer of the city of Richmond, makes a ringing defense of universal vaccination as the most efficient weapon against smallpox, and gives assurance to the public that the exercise of this precaution contains no element of danger.

Dr. Levy was led to make this public statement by the unrest that has developed in certain quarters following the death of seven-year-old Mildred Hays Blanning, on November 13, from tetanus, said to have been contracted through the infection of a vaccination wound.

"It is not at all certain that this death from tetanus was due to the vaccination," said Dr. Levy. "In fact, the physician who performed the vaccination and who signed the death certificate thinks it most probable that this was not the case. There is no doubt that the child was vaccinated and that it died, a month later, from what the attending physician considered to be tetanus (lockjaw). We may be very sure that the vaccine itself did not contain the germ of tetanus. The germ of tetanus is rather widely distributed, and whenever the skin is broken in any way there is always some chance of tetanus developing.

"It is most unlikely in this special case that the tetanus germ even gained entrance to the body from any outside source at the time of vaccination; for in that case the symptoms of the distributeds.

Secretary Redfield, in Annual Report, Refers to Urgent Necessity for Alaskan Surveys. 9

WASHINGTON, November 22.—Characterizing the past attitude of the Federal government as "that of a wealthy and prosperous man, refusing to give his loyal children the necessaries of life," Secretary of Commerce Redfield, in a part of his annual report, made public to-night, emphasized the need of legislation and money for safeguarding vessels against needless destruction.

"The commission believes that nothing desirable can be gained from publication for this reason it has not made public even the times and places of its meetings. But the commission has not been idle. Since its organization, many meetings have been held, much information has not been idle. Since its organization, many meetings have been held, much information head places of its meetings. "Our citizens who have been drowned (thirty-one in one case), and both private and public property repeatedly lost, because the United States government has not more rapidly provided the force and apparatus with which to survey and chart the dangerous waters of our Pacific, and particularly of our Alaskan coast," the secretary said. Immediate need for three new vesses for survey work along the Alaskan coast was pointed out.

Referring to the necessity for Alaskan surveys, the secretary said the plan of discovering rocks by running vessels on them had become so common that rocks generally were named after the steamer which hit them. "It puts the nation to the blush that the coast and geodetic survey should operate under conditions which would in private business cause the discharge the superintendent who allowed them to continue," the secretary added. Congress will be asked this winter for a sufficient further sum to permit keeping vessels in operation through-out the year, to provide for the early building of new ships and for the use

As an incentive to work, the committee has offered a prize of a trip to Washington to the troop that gains the largest number of memberships, to be settled on the percentage basis.
